The arrival of Hurricane Isaac exactly seven years after Hurricane Katrina blasted New Orleans has some people wondering if there's more to it than random chance, and suggesting the popular homosexual festival Southern Decadence may be part of a judgment from God.

"A hurricane hitting a celebration of decadence ... twice in seven years. What are the odds?" asks Robin Cox, a lifelong Gulf Coast resident.

"Does it seem God has it in for New Orleans?" adds Mary Starkey. "Just contemplating why this has happened twice in seven years at exact same time of year."

Dating back to 1972, Southern Decadence bills itself today as "one of the largest annual celebrations and festivals in New Orleans, it has become known as the 'Gay Mardi Gras.'"

One of its promotional websites indicates: "People begin to arrive on the Wednesday before Labor Day, and generally don't even think about stopping or going home until the following Tuesday. With over 120,000 gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender participants, and an economic impact estimated to be in excess of $125 million, the city has recognized the festival's importance with an official proclamation to welcome the event."

A Facebook page for Southern Decadence indicates the annual event will still go on this week:

"OMG! Over 1,000 emails about Decadence!" the page states. "Don't worry guys. All is set to begin on Thursday, August 30th running through Labor Day, September 3rd for the 41st Southern Decadence. The biggest problem I'm hearing is flight cancellations. I sure hope the airline industry will do their best to get all of you revelers here for this big circuit weekend ... We need y'all for its success!"

The timing of Isaac in relation to Katrina has caught the attention of some Christian pastors, including John McTernan of the Defend and Proclaim the Faith website...
