

Unprecedented Skull Discovery Raises Serious Questions over Evolutionary Premises

The discovery of an ancient human skull in the Asian country of Georgia has thrown the proverbial monkey wrench into the theory of human evolution.

On October 18th, Science Magazine published a journal article titled, "A Complete Skull from Dmanisi, Georgia, and the Evolutionary Biology of Early Homo." The article records the discovery of a human skull found in Dmanisi, Georgia, where numerous other ancient human remains have been discovered.

The skull had been discovered in 2005; however, as explained in the journal article abstract, scientists have only recently determined the significance of the skull.

"Here we report on a new cranium from Dmanisi that, together with its mandible, represents the world's first completely preserved adult hominid skull from the early Pleistocene," the abstract reports. "The Dmanisi sample, which now comprises five crania, provides direct evidence for wide morphological variation within and among early Homo paleodemes. This implies the existence of a single evolving lineage of early Homo, with phylogeographic continuity across continents."

For evolutionists, the skull presents a major problem. According to naturalistic dating methods, the specimen is nearly 2 million years old. Yet, despite the alleged ancient age, the skull is similar to today's cranial structures, with differences that could fit into variation levels of modern humans.

For decades, evolutionists have claimed that different human species evolved at different rates in various locations. However, the skull discovery in Georgia shows that there was actually much more continuity than predicted, with only one distinct lineage of humans. Critics of evolution say this discovery lends support to the creationist model of human history, since the Bible outlines that all nations were "made of one blood" (Acts 17:26).

David Lordkipanidze, lead study author for the research, admitted that the skull discovery in Georgia has forced anthropologists to reconsider long-held evolution premises regarding the history of humans across the world. As Lordkipanidze put it, evolutionary scientists are now "rethinking what happened in Africa."

Major mainstream outlets are also reporting how the Georgia skull has presented a significant challenge to evolutionary theory. "The skull discovery has led researchers to a surprising conclusion: Specimens that supposedly represent several early human species might be merely different-sized individuals from the same species," NBC News reports. "If the conclusion holds up, the skull discovery would require a major rewrite for the story of early human evolution."

"Researchers suggest that the fossil record of what have been considered different Homo species from this time period ... could actually be variations on a single species, Homo erectus," CNN explains. "That defies the current understanding of how early human relatives should be classified."

"Modern humans have an enormous variation in stature (4 to 7 feet), physical appearance (coal black aborigines to lily white Scandinavians), and brain capacity (700 to 2000 cc)," writes Bruce Malone in his book Censored Science. "It is apparent from the fossil record that this human disparity was larger in the past. ... It is also apparent that fully human skull shapes were ...

Note from Pastor Kevin Lea: On many scientific fronts, the evolutionary fairy tale is being exposed for the lie that it is. History will show that Darwinian evolution was the greatest fraud ever perpetrated on gullible mankind.

How could it be that the “theory” of evolution could be accepted as fact by most people when there is absolutely no shred of scientific evidence in support of Darwin’s premise that the incredible number of diverse and complex life forms on earth today evolved by chance from single cell organisms that arose spontaneously out of a primordial chemical soup millions of years ago?

The answer is that most people want to believe the lie that we are here only through an accident of time and chance, because the alternative is unacceptable to them. The alternative is that there is a Creator God, and we are accountable to Him. That people would rather believe a lie than submit to God is so tragic, because this same Creator God loves us so much that He sent Jesus to take the judgment we deserve for our sins upon Himself on the cross, providing a way for us to receive forgiveness and eternal life through repentance and faith in Jesus.

If we reject this offer of forgiveness and life, we do so to our own damnation, just as Paul wrote in Romans Chapter 1:

For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who suppress the truth in unrighteousness, because what may be known of God is manifest in them, for God has shown it to them. For since the creation of the world His invisible attributes are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse, because, although they knew God, they did not glorify Him as God, nor were thankful, but became futile in their thoughts, and their foolish hearts were darkened. Professing to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like corruptible man — and birds and four-footed animals and creeping things. Romans 1:18-23 (NKJV)
